- Students will learn about race, ethnicity, gender, class, sexuality, intersectional feminisms, and identity in order to examine how they inform both Chicana/e/o individual and community social, economic, political, and historical outcomes.
- Students will critically assess historical and contemporary paradigms to explain how power is created, how Chicana/e/o communities maintain power against oppressive structures, and how Chicana/e/o communities operationalize power to employ anti-colonial and social justice norms and values.
- Students will evaluate and produce research and scholarship to distinguish, differentiate, and analyze theories and practices of space, place, and belonging in an effort to identify diversity in Chicana/e/o communities.
- Students will express how relationships among Chicana/e/o cultural practices, expressions, and epistemologies create new forms of knowledge.
- Students will engage in and gain practical leadership experience in the Chicana/e/o community by participating in civic engagement, activism opportunities, internships, and community-based events on campus and in the community.
